

Trace announces acquisition of Genealogists.com

Trace adds additional genealogy expertise to its technology products and services.

July 6, 2017 (Provo, Utah) - Trace, a technology company making family history more accessible, announced the acquisition of Genealogists.com, the world's largest family history research firm. Genealogists.com has developed a network of thousands of expert researchers worldwide who perform genealogical projects for the lowest price and highest quality. The addition of Genealogists.com will increase Trace's network of professional researchers to 4,000, bringing unmatched expertise to Trace's marketplace and packaged research services.

Trace will continue to provide Genealogists.com clients with custom research services while accelerating its technological capabilities and providing the business with expertise in marketing, sales, customer experience, and investor relations. "Trace.com will be the innovative catalyst needed to sustain Genealogists.com phenomenal growth in the U.S. and overseas," says James Heddell, Genealogists.com's founder.

Trace uses technology to create products and services that enable people to find family history information at a lower price. While there exists a strong market of genealogical enthusiasts willing to pay a premium for services, the average person often feels this information is out of reach. With the acquisition of Genealogists.com, Trace will be able to reach an even broader audience and provide answers to ancestry questions.

Wesley Eames, Trace CEO, explains "With an ever-increasing global interest in family discovery, the demand for custom researching grows annually. We're confident this acquisition will only help us to allow family history to become an easy, affordable, quality experience. Genealogists and non-genealogists alike are seeking this information."

The acquisition was completed on April 7, 2017, growing the number of employees and contractors from six in February to seventeen today. James Heddell has been named Head of Research for Trace, and will continue to manage operations for Genealogists.com. Genealogists.com team members will remain in their current locations across the United States and Trace will keep its headquarters in Provo, Utah.
